Guilin and Yangshuo

For centuries, this region of China has been depicted in paintings. Those who have not visited Guilin and Yangshuo, will consider the paintings unreal, fanciful and created in the imagination. When you see the region for yourself, you will realize at once that the paintings are not fanciful at all, they depict an exquisite reality.

The Li River is regarded as the most beautiful river in China. Its reputation rests with a stretch of the river of approximately 100 km. Rain or shine, it's a magical experience and it's easy to see why the dramatic karst outcrops, dense vegetation and the winding river itself, have inspired Chinese art and verse for centuries. The cruise usually takes around 3.5 to 4 hours, depending on water conditions

The famous Li River Cruise has been spoiled to some extent by mass tourism. The scenery, however, has not been spoiled and you must see it. It's a once in a lifetime experience.

In order to take the river trip, a night must be spent in Guilin, now a modern city. It is, however, the gateway to all that is most beautiful in this region.

The Li River cruise ends in Yangshuo, a destination that has exploded with tourism and is for some, a shopper's paradise.

Activities can include cycling, walking and river rafting. For the more energetic, some serious hiking and ancient village exploration.

Guilin's Heishan Botanical Garden

The garden covers an area of more than 40 hectares and has a green seedling production base of 126 hectares. It is a comprehensive enterprise integrating seedling production, greening landscape construction, popular science, and tourism and leisure. The park has more than 210,000 trees and more than 400 species, belonging to more than 100 branches. There are cherished plants such as the medlar and golden flower tea.

Chinese Academy of Sciences, Guilin Botanical Garden

Built in 1958, the Guilin Botanical Garden is one of the earliest of the ten botanical gardens established in China. Two famous botanists, founders, have presided over the work of the Botanical Garden. The purpose of the Garden is to collect the subtropical plant species in South Asia, with a focus on Guangxi endemic plants, limestone endemic plants, rare and endangered plants and various economic ornamental plants. Guilin Botanical Garden covers an area of 67 hectares and has more than 2,100 species of plants. These include 181 national key protected plants. At present, divisions of the Park include a palm area, cycad area, medicinal plant area, flower bonsai area, a rare and endangered botanical garden, a mulan Garden and other exhibition areas. In addition there is a Ginkgo biloba plantation, kiwi germplasm resources and high-yield demonstration gardens.
